

Use your space, fill the gaps.

If you want to avoid damages you cannot just pack things in the same order as you find them on the shelf or in the cupboard – you always have to try to find a matching object that fits in the free space of the box.

Always try to find matching objects in the room you are in. This will avoid that the boxes must be carried from one room to another when you unpack things at your new home. You will certainly find the suitable things within the room.

If you can't find a suitable object you will have to make an exception and use something from another room. That's still better than risking damages. Otherwise, your only option is to fill out the hollow space with crumpled paper.